the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. NEY, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted the following

ADVERSE REPORT

together with

MINORITY VIEWS

[To accompany H.R. 2356]

[Including cost estimate of the Congressional Budget Office]

The Committee on House Administration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 2356) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide bipartisan campaign reform, having considered the same, report unfavorably thereon without recommendation

The Committee on House Administration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 2356) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to reform the financing of campaigns for elections for Federal office, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report unfavorably thereon.

DISCUSSION OF THE LEGISLATION

The Committee on House Administration has unfavorably reported H.R. 2356, the “Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act”. While the bills bearing the name of our colleagues Mr. Shays and Mr. Meehan have changed and evolved over the years, the core principal underlying their legislation had always been their purported “ban” on soft money. In fact, no bill to ever carry the Shays-Meehan label would have really banned soft money, in as much as restrictions on soft money expenditures were never even sought (except for the constitutionally suspect attempt to restrict issue advertising). Rather, Shays-Meehan and other reform proponents always used the term “ban” to mean a prohibition on donations of soft money to political parties. The true test of what constituted “real” reform had always been whether or not soft money was “banned” as that term was defined by reform proponents, i.e. a simple donation ban. H.R. 2356 fails even this meager test. It permits donations of soft money, in amounts up to $10,000 per source, to state and local parties, and it does nothing to stop the flow of soft money to any organization other than a political party. Accordingly, H.R. 2356 fails to ban soft money under any definition.

Though the recognition that political parties play an important role in registering voters and getting them to the polls, and should be able to raise non-federal funds for these purposes, could be regarded as a modest improvement over the complete assault on political parties in previous iterations of Shays-Meehan, the Committee still reported H.R. 2356 unfavorably due to numerous fatal flaws. Though different in many respects from prior versions, the new Shays-Meehan bill remains an unconstitutional, ill-considered piece of legislation. No evidence has been produced to this Committee of a “corruption” problem stemming from soft money contributions to political parties. Even if there had been such a showing, H.R. 2356 does not even attempt to be a narrowly tailored remedy. If it were ever to become law, it would have precisely the opposite effect its proponents intend. Rather than diminish the power of “special interest” groups, it would actually make these groups even more powerful than they are today. Independent advocacy groups, unions and corporations would see their power and influence rise, while our national political parties would be debilitated. The result would be destabilization and factionalism, neither of which is in the best interest of our country.

Under H.R. 2356, for the first time, House and Senate candidates would be treated differently under federal election law, in terms of individual contribution limits. As drafted, H.R. 2356 would allow House candidates to raise only $1,000 per individual per election, while Senate candidates would be permitted to raise $2,000 per individual per election. There is no substantive policy rationale for such disparate treatment of candidates for the two different Houses of Congress. The provision is cynically included for no reason other than its sponsors’ belief that it increases their chances of cobbling together a majority on the House floor. No evidence was provided at any point indicating that House Members are more likely to be corrupted by a $1001 donation than our Senate colleagues, yet that would be the only constitutionally acceptable premise for this proposed disparate treatment. It is understandable why our colleagues in the other body would have no problem with such a provision, but it is inconceivable why any House Member would support such an unfair and unbalanced provision.

Additionally, Senate candidates receive more preferential treatment in the form of a “millionaire’s amendment” that permits them to raise amounts five times greater than those permitted all other candidates, when faced with an opponent who spends over a certain amount of personal funds on their campaign. House candidates who find themselves in a race against a wealthy opponent receive no such relief. Again, the provision is included only to maximize the bill’s chances for passage, there being no policy rationale for such disparate treatment.

CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED ISSUE ADVOCACY

As it has in the past, H.R. 2356 attempts to impose unconstitutional restrictions on protected expression. Those who seek to impose such restrictions argue that they are necessary because unions and corporations are using issue advertisements to influence campaigns in a manner not intended or permitted by the Federal Election Campaign Act.

The bright line test between express and issue advocacy was laid down by the Supreme Court in Buckley v. Valeo, and it has been reaffirmed repeatedly by lower courts since. Numerous attempts by the Federal Election Commission to expand its regulatory reach over communications which do not expressly advocate the election or defeat of clearly identified federal candidates (the definition of issue ads) have been rejected by the courts.

Those who advocate new restrictions on non-express advocacy communications are frustrated by these court decisions. But it is the First Amendment on which the Supreme Court and other courts rely for the proposition that express terms of advocacy are required for a communication to be subject to government regulation. Those who seek greater regulation seem to view the First Amendment, not as a protection to the citizens from government regulation of political speech, but rather as a “loophole” to be closed in order to expand Congress’s ability to regulate elections. Of course, the First Amendment, which begins “Congress shall make no law * * *” was specifically designed to preclude the government from restricting the speech of the people. Some Members of Congress may feel frustrated by the things being said about them, but the First Amendment prevents Congress and its Members from using their powers to restrict, regulate or punish their critics.

It is not as if, in some shortsighted fashion, the Supreme Court failed to foresee the potential electoral impact of this kind of issue advocacy. The decision to leave such communications unrestricted was not an oversight that requires Congressional correction, rather, it was a deliberate refusal to permit government intrusion on protected expression. As the Court said:

Discussion of public issues and debate on the qualifications of candidates are integral to the operation of the system of government established by our Constitution. The First Amendment affords the broadest protection to such political expression in order “to assure [the] unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people.” Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 14 (1976).

The attempt by H.R. 2356 to restrict issue advocacy is an unconstitutional overreach and would likely be struck down by the Court. As this is the only provision in the bill which attempts to restrict how unions, corporations, and advocacy groups spend their organizations’ treasury funds, as opposed to donating them, the result will be a political world where “special interest” groups have absolutely unfettered ability to spend soft dollars, while the political parties, forbidden from receiving such funds, will not be able to spend any. Clearly, H.R. 2356 is not a bill that will minimize the influence of “special interests” as such interests are often referenced by the advocates of H.R. 2356.

In addition, H.R. 2356 is not narrowly tailored to address a particular or compelling governmental interest. In fact, disclosure of the identity of sponsors of communications is the only interest identified by the advocates of H.R. 2356 to justify government regulation of speech which the Supreme Court has previously ruled is not subject to government regulation. If indeed disclosure is the compelling governmental interest, the provisions of H.R. 2356 extend far beyond the degree of regulation necessary to achieve the goal. In fact, H.R. 2356 has the ultimate effect of chilling and even precluding certain communications by creating an expansive regulatory system which dictates not only disclosure but also the permissible sources of funding, the timing and content of speech otherwise protected by the First Amendment.

COORDINATION

The expansive definition of behaviors that constitute coordination between citizens, citizens groups and candidates for public office would discourage (if not eliminate) communications between citizens and their elected representatives. Under H.R. 2356, any payment made pursuant to a "general or particular understanding" with an elected official would be treated as a contribution and therefore severely limited. Further, such "coordination" does not even require "collaboration or agreement" to establish coordination. With such a vague and sweeping definition, a simple meeting between an individual and his/her Member of Congress could trigger an FEC investigation into the subject of the meeting and the issues discussed. As Lawrence Gold, Associate General Counsel for the AFL-CIO testified; "In its investigation into alleged coordination, the [FEC] has used its subpoena power to seek to identify, and inquire into the details of virtually every contact between a corporation or union, acting through its officers, directors, members and allies, and a candidate, political party, or anyone else who might be acting on the candidate's behalf."

Unquestionably, this will have a chilling effect on the rights of citizens and citizen groups to speak and associate freely. This provision is in direct conflict with one of the stated goals of the proponents, i.e. that reform will make citizens more willing to become involved in politics. Clearly the opposite is true. People who know that a simple meeting with a Congressman could trigger a costly and burdensome investigation will simply disassociate themselves from politics.

The First Amendment not only protects political speech but also the right of the citizens to petition their government for redress of grievances. H.R. 2356 ignores this protected right afforded the people by the First Amendment and would convert such activities to potentially incriminating evidence of illegal political campaign activity through "coordination".

The definition of "coordination" is largely left to the Federal Election Commission, other than directing the Commission to define "coordination" expansively and with utter disregard for the applicable decisions of the Supreme Court and other federal courts over the past twenty-five years. Such important definitions should not and cannot be delegated by the Congress with nothing more than a list of the factors the Federal Election Commission should consider, with no legislative guidance as to the decision the Commission is to make with respect to each of the factors. H.R. 2356 also repeals the regulations adopted by the Federal Election Commission on the subject of “coordination” which resulted from a decision of the federal district court in FEC v. Christian Coalition. In other words, H.R. 2356 specifically directs the federal agency charged with enforcing the law to promulgate regulations on a subject in direct contravention of an order of the federal court to that agency. Such disregard of the law is not appropriate by either the agency or the Congress.

SUMMARY OF THE LEGISLATION

SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION

TITLE I—REDUCTION OF SPECIAL INTEREST INFLUENCE

Sec. 101. Soft money of political parties

- Allows state and local parties to use some funds raised in accord with state law (soft money) for voter registration drives in the last 120 days of a federal election, voter identification efforts, get-out-the-vote drives (GOTV), and generic activities, if they: match soft money equally with hard money (i.e., a 50–50 allocation formula); do not refer to a clearly identified federal candidate; do not pay for broadcast, cable, or satellite communications (unless they refer solely to state and local candidates); receive no donations from any person (including an entity established, financed, maintained, or controlled by that person) in amounts greater than $10,000 a year for such activities; and use only funds raised by the state, district, or local party expressly for such purposes and include no funds transferred from other party committees (and agents or officers acting on their behalf or entities they directly or indirectly establish, finance, maintain, or control). Prohibits any funds for special soft money accounts from being solicited, received, directed, transferred, or spent in the name of national parties or federal candidates or officials or by joint fundraising activities by two or more party committees.

- Defines federal election activity to include: (1) voter registration drives in the last 120 days of a federal election; (2) voter identification, GOTV, and generic activity in connection with an election in which a federal candidate is on the ballot; (3) public communications that refer to a clearly identified federal candidate and promote, support, attack, or oppose a candidate for that office (regardless of whether it expressly advocates a vote for or against); or (4) services by a state or local party employee who spends at least 25% of paid time in a month on activities in connection with a federal election.

- Defines generic campaign activity as one that promotes a party but not a federal or non-federal candidate.
- Defines public communications as communications by broadcast, cable, satellite, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising, mass mailing (over 500 identical or substantially similar pieces mailed within 30 days of each other), or phone bank (over 500 identical or substantially similar calls made within 30 days of each other).

- Prohibits federal candidates, officeholders, agents, or entities they directly or indirectly establish, maintain, finance, or control from raising soft money in connection with a federal election (including any federal election activity) or any money from sources beyond federal limits and prohibitions in non-federal elections (unless candidate or official is also a state or local candidate, raising funds for that campaign).
- Allows federal candidates and officials to raise money for tax-exempt organizations engaged primarily in voter registration and GOTV, subject to a limit of $10,000 per donor (i.e., limit on individual contributions to state party committee under this bill).
- Does not restrict ability of federal candidates and officials to raise money to influence state reapportionment decisions.

- Defines electioneering communication as a broadcast, cable, or satellite advertisement that refers to a clearly identified federal candidate, made within 60 days of a general election or 30 days of a primary, and, if not for President or Vice President, is targeted to relevant electorate (i.e., communication is received by 50,000 or more persons in state, for Senate elections, or district, for House elections); exempts news events, expenditures, independent expenditures, debates, and others who may be exempted by FEC.

- If definition of electioneering communication is ruled unconstitutional, provides alternate definition (based on 1987 9th Circuit ruling in FEC v. Furgatch): a broadcast, cable, or satellite communication that promotes, supports, attacks, or opposes a candidate, regardless of whether it expressly advocates a vote for or against a candidate, and is suggestive of no plausible meaning other than an exhortation to vote for or against a candidate); nothing in provision alters 11 CFR 100.22(b), FEC regulation defining express advocacy.

MINORITY VIEWS OF STENY H. HOYER, CHAKA FATTAH, AND JIM DAVIS

The “Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2001” (H.R. 2356), sponsored by Rep. Christopher Shays and Rep. Martin Meehan, is a serious, comprehensive proposal that addresses two of the most serious ills infecting American political campaigns today: (1) unregulated soft money contributions and (2) undisclosed issue advocacy.

There simply is too much special-interest money from too few sources flowing into party committees in the form of soft money, and onto the airwaves in the form of thinly disguised political advertisements paid for with unrestricted dollars from entities that are permitted, under today’s broken campaign finance regime, to disclose as much or as little about their operations as they choose. Many of these entities are barred by the Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) from raising and spending any money to influence federal campaigns. Increased reliance on soft money shows no signs of abating, and is of particular concern.

On June 28, 2001, the Committee Majority chose to report H.R. 2356 with an unfavorable recommendation. Given that nearly identical legislation passed the House of Representatives by strong bipartisan majorities in 1998 and 1999, we find it unfortunate that Committee Majority acted as it did.

We urge our colleagues in both parties to ignore the Committee’s unfavorable recommendation and judge H.R. 2356 on one simple strength: its ambition to require that all activities aimed at influencing federal elections be paid for only with fully disclosed and reasonably limited amounts of money known as “hard money” and to eliminate the most pernicious factor in today’s political system, the unlimited, largely undisclosed money known as “soft money.”

SOFT MONEY

H.R. 2356 is the only bill reported by the Committee that contains a comprehensive ban on soft money. Simply put, Shays-Meehan not only limits but outlaws all soft money contributions to the national parties, ensuring that every penny collected by the parties conforms with FECA. In practice, no individual, however wealthy, could contribute more than $75,000 in a two-year election cycle to influence federal elections under Shays-Meehan. No corporation or union that has exploited the soft money loophole to get around FECA’s prohibition on direct giving would be permitted to influence federal campaigns except through a federally regulated political action committee.

H.R. 2356’s soft money ban contrasts sharply with H.R. 2360, the other bill reported by the Committee, which would place a very high $75,000 annual cap on soft money to the national parties. In a nation where the median income for a family of four is approximately $59,000, we believe a cap of $75,000 is not a cap at all. To make matters worse, H.R. 2356's "cap" would apply to each of three national committee in the two parties. In theory, a corporation, union, or wealthy individual could give as much as $900,000 in soft money in a two-year election cycle, assuming it sought to curry favor with both parties and contributed the maximum amount to each. Combined with H.R. 2360's proposed increases in hard money contributions, a wealthy individual could contribute as much as $1,335,000 in hard and soft money in a two-year election cycles.

The very nature of soft money—unlimited contributions from the corporations and unions that are prohibited from making direct "hard money" contributions—violates the spirit and intent of the modern federal election system that traces its origins back to 1907, when Republican President Theodore Roosevelt signed legislation prohibiting corporations and insurance companies from using treasury money to influence federal elections.

Soft money includes money from corporations and unions that is not supposed to be influencing federal elections at all. Yet, it has gradually come to be the dominant form of campaign dollars in the 27 years since Congress last enacted comprehensive campaign finance reform. H.R. 2356 addresses public concerns over soft money by prohibiting soft money contributions to national political parties and curtailing soft money activities conducted by state and local parties.

Soft money contributions to political parties exist solely because of an unfortunate loophole opened by the Federal Election Commission that elections lawyers, political consultants, and wealthy special interests have exploited with unusual skill and sophistication. With each passing election cycle, soft money contributions to state and national parties have increased in volume until a trickle has turned into a torrent. Between 1996 and 2000, the total amount of soft money contributed to national parties grew from approximately $250 million to over $500 million. Given the vast number of uses to which political parties may legally put soft money, and the relative ease with which they can raise soft money compared to hard money, it is not surprising that parties have developed a significant dependence on a handful of super-wealth soft money contributors to finance their political and administrative operations.

This increase has led to more direct and blatant attempts by contributors to purchase access and influence the political process, and has driven an ever-increasing "dollars race" between the party committees. In fact, the amounts of money sought and the increasingly constant appeals for soft dollars have led many leaders in the business community to join the call for reforming the soft money system.

H.R. 2356 would prohibit all soft money contributions from corporations, labor groups, and wealthy individuals. It would also end virtually all "backdoor" soft money to state, local, and district parties, while recognizing the role that sharply limited soft money can play in legitimate voter turnout and registration efforts at the state and local level. To that end, H.R. 2356 allows soft money contributions to state and local parties to be used for limited voter registration and get-out-the-vote activity, but caps it at $10,000 per donor.

Furthermore, the measure doubles from $5,000 to $10,000 the amount of hard money individuals may contribute to state parties.

In short, under the Shays-Meehan bill, national, state, local, and district parties could continue to raise and spend sufficient resources to register and educate voters, support candidates, and promote broad-based platforms that are central ingredients of a healthy and vital representative-democracy.

ISSUE ADVOCACY

The Shays-Meehan bill also would provide a reasonable solution to the problem of unlimited and undisclosed advertising that fails to qualify as “express advocacy” under federal election law, even though it clearly is designed to influence the outcome of an election. As a result of a series of court decisions, the term “express advocacy” currently refers only to those communications that include the so-called “magic words,” such as “vote for candidate X” or “defeat candidate Y.”

There are three consequences when advertising does not meet this narrow express advocacy standard: First, it may be paid for with unlimited amounts of money from any source, including corporations and labor groups. Second, neither the amount spent nor the source of the funding need be disclosed to the public. Third, the advertising is not required to carry a truthful disclaimer to inform the voter who actually paid for the communication.

Since 1996, so-called “issue advertising” abuses have exploded. The Annenberg Public Policy Center estimates that between $275 million and $340 million was spent on issue advertising in 1998, the last election year for which data are available. However, no one can be certain of the exact figure since no disclosure is required. Both political parties, as well as a wide range of interest groups and entities whose origin and purpose remain largely a mystery, have exploited issue advocacy in recent elections to run ads that clearly are designed to advocate the election or defeat of specific federal candidates, but evade federal election regulations by avoiding the “magic words.” Since these ads stop just short of using the magic words, their sponsors are not subject to full public disclosure, the ads need carry no disclaimer, and they may be paid for with unlimited dollars from any source.

Insufficient disclosure is a serious problem that real reform must address. Messages are not identifiable for most audiences until they are sourced. As a result, viewers rarely interpret messages without interpreting the credibility of the source who is sponsoring the message. As long as pseudonymous groups are able to communicate to the electorate, the ability of the electorate to judge the legitimacy of the message that is being offered is seriously weakened. Voters cannot confidently determine how much credibility to lend a communication when they do not know the source of the communication. In short, without real disclosure of the sources of money funding sham issue ads, the ability of the voters to make informed decisions is severely undermined.

H.R. 2356 addresses the problem by providing a clear distinction between advertising seeking to persuade voters on issues and “sham” issue advertising—advertising that clearly is intended to promote the election or defeat of a federal candidate. It would create a new class of ads called “electioneering communications,” defined as “broadcast, cable, or satellite ads that mention the name or show the likeness of a clearly identified federal candidate within 60 days of a general or 30 days of a primary, and is targeted at the candidate’s state or district.” Under this provision, corporations and labor unions would have to finance their ads through their PAC’s, and a range of other groups would have to disclose their spending and donors.

It bears emphasizing that passage of the “electioneering communications” provision would in no way abridge the free speech rights of any group or individual. For those groups and individuals interested in promoting the election or defeat of the federal candidates of their choice, it would simply require that they play by the same rules that currently apply to candidates and political action committees. These modest burdens placed on groups and individuals seeking to engage in what most reasonable people already assume is express advocacy will not limit their ability to reach voters. In addition, the increased disclosure and disclaimer requirements will cast sunlight on political spending and fundraising by interest groups, providing voters with valuable information with which to judge their credibility and motives.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Beyond correcting major systemic problems in today’s campaign finance system, H.R. 2356 would accomplish several other necessary but less crucial fixes to the campaign finance system.

For example, the measure retains the 1974 $1,000 limit on individual contributions per election to House candidates, while acknowledging that 27 years of inflation has sharply reduced its purchasing power. To account for future inflation, H.R. 2356 indexes this $1,000 limit, a sensible provision that ensures increases in the hard money limit do not outpace the economy as a whole and widen the gap between wealthy contributors and contributors of more modest means.

H.R. 2356 also provides for better and more vigorous enforcement of federal election laws, tougher penalties for those who are found to have knowingly broken the laws, and more rapid disclosure of campaign activities.

CONCLUSION

True campaign finance reform aims to accomplish three goals:

1. Completely end the unregulated, unlimited flow of soft money into the political parties;
2. Require that political advertising that any reasonable viewer would say are designed to influence a federal election be paid for with hard money.
3. Respect the right of organizations to communicate with their members about key issues affecting them.

In our view, H.R. 2356 is the only measure before the House that deserves to be called true reform. We are confident our colleagues on both sides of the aisle will agree. If history is any guide, they will. In 1998 and 1999, a similar Shays-Meehan bill passed 252–179 and 252–177, respectively. We urge our colleague to show this same strong bipartisan support this year and pass H.R. 2356.
